

Creative Media Facilitator

£22,000 - £24,000 per annum

Teaching Divided Histories Project, The Nerve Centre

Teaching Divided Histories aims to make a strategic impact on current approaches to the teaching of history, culture and identity in schools in Northern Ireland and beyond. The project partners will work closely with a core group of teachers and educators from post-conflict or fragile countries to develop and pilot a range of innovative education programmes that use film, digital photography, animation, comic books and webcasting to enable young people to explore common experiences of violence and peace-building.

We are seeking a Creative Media Facilitator to lead delivery and assist in the planning and design of a range of training programmes undertaken in schools and with teachers to embed new models of conflict education into the curriculum in Northern Ireland and the border regions and in other countries emerging from conflict. The postholder will also be responsible for multi-platform project dissemination across web, video and social media.

Applicants will be experienced digital educators within the local education sectors, with highly developed digital skills and strong awareness of the issues arising around conflict education in Northern Ireland.
